

Saga Of The Sally Marie

Fisherman Local Version Of Boat People

Matthew Marr's 38' fishing boat, the "Sally Marie," was ordered removed from Cohasset Harbor by Norfolk Superior Court Judge Rudolph Pierce last Monday. Marr removed the boat Thursday night, possibly in contempt of court, to a temporary mooring in Scituate Harbor.

Assistant Town Counsel Richard Henderson last Monday mailed a copy of the restraining order to Marr directly, a copy to Marr's attorney, Michael Savage, and a copy to the Norfolk County sheriff's office for servicing.

"I believe Marr received the order by Tuesday," Henderson said Friday and noted that he should have been served by the sheriff by Thursday night. Because the boat was still in the harbor on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Henderson said, Harbor-master Harry Ritter came to Henderson with a complaint.

"Believing Marr had received the order on Tuesday, a contempt petition was filed by the town on Thursday, July 5, and another Norfolk Superior Court judge issued an order of notice for a hearing on the contempt," Henderson said. The hearing on the contempt charge will also be heard on July 12 in conjunction with a hearing for a preliminary injunction to further restrain Marr from mooring the "Sally Marie" in the harbor.

Henderson added, "The fact that the boat is now removed means that the Town can request that, or will be inclined to, withdraw the contempt charge."

When Ritter was questioned Thursday night as to the whereabouts of Marr's boat, he replied, "It was last seen going through the channel." The boat was moored overnight at Scituate Harbor town pier, according to Marr, and has since been moved temporarily to a lobster car mooring in Scituate Harbor.

"I'm hopefully going back to Cohasset," Marr said this week. Marr said that the restraining order from mooring in Cohasset was making it "very difficult" for him to fish. "It's practically putting me out of business," he said.

Marr contended that the mooring difficulty was contrived. "There was no problem of my boat coming near any boats. They didn't dare put Harry Silvia's boat (a 32' Pacemaker) on his mooring while mine was there because it would show there wasn't any problem."

Ritter had been unable to moor Silvia's boat on its mooring because of low tide flows which he feared could cause congestion and collision of boats in the area of Marr's mooring. Silvia's boat was temporarily moored on a 34' lobsterboat mooring.

Villagers Think Christmas

Board members of the Cohasset Village & Harbor Association met July 5 for their monthly meeting.

Plans are now being formulated for Christmas decorations on the common and village area. Electrical requirements necessitate the early planning. Means of combating vandalism, littering and shoplifting were also discussed. The success of the litter baskets around town, paid for by the C.V.&H.A. and put in place by the town and ways of discouraging litter in the Common duck pond are being studied. It was agreed that "All" Vandalisms and shoplifting be reported.
